[Lynn, Mass.] The writer's society has felt sufficiently encouraged by the addressee and her friends to proceed with its plans for a fair. Says that children's hose, mittens and toys sell best in Lynn. "Were it not for a few individuals I believe the society would long before this have disbanded." Complains of a spirit of indifference and apathy. Invites the addressee and Mrs. L. M. Child to address her society.

most of the abolitionists of Cleveland are third party men or Millerites. The writer deplores Collins's poor health and his absorption in "property operations." Remond and Douglass "blew him up" in a property meeting at Syracuse. The Whigs would not suffer Joshua Reed Giddings to be heard in Cleveland. The writer spent a day with Gerrit Smith at Peterborough and accompanied him to a Sabbath abolition meeting. "Gerrit collects thousands to hear him..." G. Smith urged the writer to spend two months in his county, and offered him liberal compensation for his services. A similar offer was made to Abby Kelley, who thought it an attempt to bribe her "and wrote Smith an excoriating letter." Charles T. To[illegible] disclaimed having opposed women's rights. The writer h[illegible]clared publicly that he would sooner vote for the devil than for such a man as Alvan Stuart, unless he retracted a published letter against "our conventions"

[Oakland, Ohio] Having received a second letter from the addressee, in which she recalled her first one, the writer was inclined not to send his reply (of Aug.31), but on further reflection thought it right that she should know how the first letter was received. This is the third day of the annual meeting here, which has drawn "immense multitudes." The writer counted 470 horses standing around Liberty Hall the first day. Here there is need of a number of speakers. Almost all friends, except (S.S.) Foster and the writer, have been suffering from bronchitis. Remarks on the absence of Douglass and Remond; thinks they may as well not rejoin the speakers, as in some of the[illegible]es they are to visit "neither of them would be suffered t[illegible]ak." «Green Plain, Ohio» Reply to the addressee's letter which accuses the writer of bad faith toward the American and Massachusetts A.S. Societies in his conduct "in relation to the Liberty Party." If the Mass. Board, to whom alone he holds himself responsible, had written him such a letter, the writer would have "denounced the Board as a band of mean-spirited knaves." Explains that with one exception - a sharp rebuke to Alvan Stewart for his letter to the Liberty Press - the writer's course, in respect to the Liberty Party, has been the same throughout: he has nothing to say either for or against it, does not consider it his duty to damn the characters of its members, or to denounce [illegible] Party. As the addressee deems his course wrong and feels [illegible]lf responsible, the writer suggests three ways by which she can relieve herself of the responsibility. [Boston] The writer's legislative duties have taken all his time. His favorite measure, the Marriage Bill, has again been defeated, but the writer expects it to be passed next year, for he has kept stirring up the present Legislature. The House has passed resolves, introduced by the writer, requesting Congress to alter the naturalization laws, also a bill abolishing imprisonment for debt. N. Colver continues to behave "atrociously." The writer was present at the Annual Meeting, "when the extracts of his libellous letters to Eng[land] were read." The third party Abolitionists have just held a convenhere,-"a contemptible affair." Tells of a discussion there about the abolition of the p[illegible]x as a condition for voting.

[Cleveland, Ohio] The writer left John A. Collins at Syracuse and Frederick Douglass at Buffalo, both on the sick-list. Fears that Collins is seriously ill; received a letter from Collins' wife telling that the doctor had ordered him to speak no more for at least three months. Collins has spoken little at anti-slavery conventions, but more in his "property conventions." The writer doubts the value of such conventions for abolition. Believes that a single individual might have accomplished more than "the whole of us." Many friends of the cause have expressed the same idea. The best convention was at Rochester; describes a Sunday meeting before an audience of some 4000. Friends wanted more meeting[illegible]re, but the writer was obliged to go to Buffalo, where he [illegible]d three days for want of hearers. The writer found Jacob Ferris quite disheartened, for

Leavy Greave
~~Lemmy Greene~~(?) Sheffield, England. Reports on the activities of Henry C. Wright and Frederick Douglass. Of H.C.Wright: "we have greatly enjoyed his fireside society." Tells about his various meetings, including one attended by 700-800 children. Of F. Douglass: "I feel almost afraid to trust myself to speak of this dear friend so highly do I estimate his moral & intellectual character." Praises his speeches. H.C. Wright and F. Douglass left Leeds for New Castle, to spend a few hours with Elizabeth Pease at Darlington.
